The reichstag has appropriated $500,000 vill eventually have an embassy costing nearly a million dollars, which will be one of the handsomest diplomatic buildings in any capital of the world.

Style of the Building.

This addition to the various public and private buildings now adorning the capital, the German commission said this morning, will be designed to harmonize with the existing architectural beauty of probably be on the order of the modified olonial type so widely exemplified here. The commission now in Washington for the purpose of studying the site, its surroundings, the architecture of the capital, and its environs, consists of Herr Kettner, privy councelor and councilor of the foreign office at Berlin, and Prof. Peter Behrens, imperial German architect. The party also included Herr Saran, councilor of the department of public works at Berlin, who left yesterday for home, after a study of engineering conditions in

"There has been some talk," Herr Kettner said today, "that the new embassy would be designed as a replica on a small scale of the imperial palace, Sans Souci, at Potsdam, but it has been decided to design an embassy which will be thoroughly in keeping, architecturally, with Washington edifices. There are 51,000 square feet in the plot at our disposal and on it we shall probably erect a white stone building, which, we hope, will be a real addition to the many beautiful buildings in this capital. "The new embassy will contain sufficient rooms for the chancellerie, so that there will be no necessity for breaking the architectural design of the building to obtain nearby offices in another small building. There will be a very large drawing room, a very large ballroom and, of course, a room in keeping with its importance for a study for the ambassalor, in addition to the other rooms usual in such a structure, combining, as it will, the idea of a residence with that of the official headquarters of Germany in Project Not New One.

"The frontage of the plot at our disposal, being 300 feet on S street, we hope to be able to produce a design of embassy and landscaping of gardens in which the embassy will set that will be at least as handsome as anything in Washington. The present project is not a new one, inasmuch as Germany bought the site six years ago, but we have been erecting buildings for ambassadors, minsters and consuls all over the world, and t was not until this year that the Washinton project was reached in the appropriations by the reischstag, so that we have only just gotten authority to go Louis," Prof. Behrens said, "there has "Ever since the world's fair at St. been a growing change in German art ideas, and in Germany, nowadays, artists bend all their efforts toward adapting the forms of beauty toward practical uses. So that we do not expect to have what might be called ornateness in the design of the new embassy.

Materials to Be Natural.

be shown as stone. In other words, in designing the building we do not expect to bring to the aid of wood any elements that do not belong to it. We shall not try to assist wood or assist stone. We have the idea in Germany, nowadays, that they are complete in themselves, so that there will be no tinning of wood or painting of stone.

"There are many materials here in America to work with highly suitable for our purposes. None better could be found anywhere. So we shall gather these materials here. But we shall send some German decorators over for the new embassy, and they will have much to do with ornamenting the building. "It is impossible to tell at this time when the work on the building will begin The plans have not yet been designed, and, of course, the foreign office must approve them when they are."

Civil War Record.

During the civil war he served in the Quartermaster's Volunteers, a military organization of the clerks, agents and operatives of the quartermaster's department of the United States Army. This organization was composed of civilian employes, who were enrolled, armed with guns and ammunition and drilled by officers commissioned by the United States, as soldiers in the trenches and on the field at Nashville, Jacksonville and Washington. Eighteen hundred of them were engaged in the defense of Washington, July 11, 12 and 13, 1864, known as the battle of Fort Stevens. Because they were not regularly enlisted in the service of the United States, and, consequently, were not given regulation discharges at the close of the war, the members of this organization have been denied recognition as soldiers of the army of the United States.
